MOBILE BABIES STILL BAG THEIR BUNDLE

Cross-border bubs will not miss out on the NSW Government's Baby Bundle with all NSW mothers who give birth interstate also eligible to receive it from 1 January, 2019.

The contents of the Baby Bundle, which is part of the NSW Government's $157 million parenting package, were recently announced at an event at Royal North Shore Hospital.

Member for Albury Greg Aplin said the Baby Bundle, valued at $300, is filled with educational resources and baby products to help parents.

"We have made sure that our local mums won't miss out on this great support package from the NSW Liberal & Nationals government just because they give birth just over the border," Mr Aplin said.

"If you're a NSW resident and you are planning on having a baby at a hospital in Wodonga or your new bub arrives unexpectedly when you're interstate or travelling overseas, you can still get the Baby Bundle."

The contents of the Baby Bundle, which all meet Australian safety standards, include a sleeping bag, play and change mats, muslin wrap, bath and room thermometers, baby toothbrush, breast pads, first aid kit, board books, face cloth, baby wipes, hand sanitiser and barrier cream.

It also contains important health information on child development and parental wellbeing, which all new NSW parents and caregivers will benefit from.

From 1 January 2019, parents and caregivers of newborns with a current NSW home address, can easily request a Baby Bundle via email (MOH-BabyBundles@health.nsw.gov.au) and a package will be delivered, free of charge.
